INTERESTING FACTS.

Some Statements Made by a Relative of Gen. Washington.

Probable Origin of the American Flag and Coat of Arms.

Curious Facts Given by a Namesake of the First President.

(Copyrighted 1889, by The Press.)

PARIS, May 12, 1889.

It may not be uninteresting now that our American brethren have just been memorializing the inauguration of their first and greatest president—to let a voice be heard from this side of the Atlantic by one who bears the name of George Washington, and believes himself to be the eldest representative of the Washington family in England.

I do not propose to write a genealogical treatise, but rather touch on one or two facts connected with the family generally, which may not be usually known.

Many an American's ideas of Washington and his family begin and end with the General. But this may not be quite all. Every family has its history. For persons in distress for a pedigree, the gentlemen at the Herald's office will always supply the requisite information, be the extraction ever so humble. But there are things which they cannot do. They cannot frame the future. If they can paint the past or assign reasons for what takes place. There is a very curious fact with regard to the name and family of Washington in England, viz., that in the last generation it had dwindled down to three males.

The family dating back to a certain Bardulf, mentioned in the Domesday book, whose great-grandson was lord of Washington, spread out within six or seven generations into various branches. They all bore the name of Washington: Thus there were Washingtons of Durham, Westmoreland, Lancashire, Northamptonshire, and York. This last was the first cradle of the family. At one time the name must have counted by hundreds.

Now, that which the gentlemen of the Herald's office cannot do is to give us any reason why so numerous and healthy a stock should have become reduced to three persons, who could perpetuate the name. John, the son of Lawrence, had left us several generations back to go to America, and begin the ... of the name glorious there. He was of the Northampton race, and seems to have taken the luck of the family away with him.

Sufficient has been said and written of the great general's pedigree. But this is what we know about ourselves: We believe that we branched off from the original line forming the Durham contingent, about sixteen generations ago. So that taking generation for generation it may be considered that, working back sixteen generations to the junction and down from that to General Washington, we are removed from him some 16x16 family layers.

The curious thing is that with but one or two exceptions none of the name of our family are to be found in England. These exceptions are from very collateral branches.

Here then were five distinct lines reduced; it is a powerful ... and dwindled down to three brothers of the Gateshead Durham family, left to perpetuate the race in the year say 1850. One of these, Henry, died unmarried.

Mais nous avons changé tout cela. Now there are of the two (then surviving) brothers six married male children. Five of these have male issue, so that the line does not appear likely to become extinct at present.

But a word or two about the name. There is a small village nestled away in Yorkshire now called Washton. This hamlet, situated four miles from Richmond, has been variously designated Washington, Quassington, Whyssington, and Washington-Juxta Ravenswood; and it possesses the honor and glory of the name in its first and elementary state. It has given the name not to the family alone, but to another village in county Durham bearing the name of Washington. In and about this village many Washingtons flourished in other days.

The rector of Brighton, in New Northampton, traces the family from the north after this fashion. The Washingtons, he says, were a northern family, who lived for some time in Durham and Lancashire. From Lancashire they came to Northampton. The uncle of the first Lawrence Washington was Sir Thomas Kitson, one of the great merchants, who in the time of Henrys VII and VIII. developed the wool trade in the country. That wool trade depended mainly on the growth of wool and the creation of sheep farms in the midland counties. There is no doubt, therefore, that the reason why Laurence Washington settled in Northamptonshire, leaving his own profession which was that of a barrister, was that he might superintend his uncle's transactions with the sheep producers of that county. Laurence Washington became mayor of Northampton, and at the time of the dissolution of the monasteries became identified with the cause of civil and religious liberty and gained a grant of monastic lands. Sulgrave or Sulgrave was given to him. For three generations they remained at Sulgrave taking rank amongst the nobility and gentry of the county. At the end of three generations their fortunes failed. They were obliged to sell Sulgrave and retired to Brington. From this depression the Washingtons recovered by a singular marriage. The eldest son of the family had married the half sister of George Villiers, Duke of Buckingham. They rose again into great prosperity.

About the emigrant who was the great grandfather of George Washington it is not easy to discover much except that he was knighted by James I in 1623, and that there is in the county not only the tomb of the father but that of the wife of the youth who lies buried at Islip-on the Nen. He emigrated to the United States in 1657.

A suggestion. Why does not some rich American purchase the Sulgrave property in Northamptonshire, which was undoubtedly the home of the George Washington branch, and retain it as a pendant to Mount Vernon? It would be a good commemoration of the inauguration day.

There is a further matter of sympathy between ourselves, as a family, and the Americans which needs some comment in a letter touching on Washington, i. e., our quarterings and crest. These are nearly identical with those of the president, and are the same as those borne by the Durham and Northamptonshire families.

And how have they done, these quarterings? No more nor less than they supplied America with her flag. It was a natural process. How should a young state, springing into almost sudden existence, be represented to the winds and all nations of the world? Where ... a fashion how to display herself? To one man all America felt herself beholden. To one man she believed that she owed the greatest part of her success in the struggle for liberty. What more natural then, than to take the quarterings and seal of that man to whom so much was owed, and transform them into a flag? And its device stars and stripes was an effective emblem. On some such consultation as this we may believe the quarterings were taken. The three stars blossomed out in Washington's time to five, and in those later days it increased to thirteen.

We, as a family, it is no untruth to say, have given the flag to America—we Washingtons, Whysingtons, Quessingtons of England, or whatever you may like to call us.

The arms are, two bars gules; in chief three mullets of the second. Crest, a raven with wings endorsed proper, issuing from a ducal coronet.

The crest, a bird issuant, may have had as well something to say in America. That bird ... shall spread its wings. And why not become an eagle with wings quite outstretched? As the stars have multiplied from 3 to 13, the bird may become ennobled. Indicating the spreading fortunes and vastness of a new continent, the humbler raven may have grown into a grander bird, and become the ... eagle of America, her sign and emblem—no unfitting pendant to the star spangled banner.

And now some ... will say. Very well of the past, but what of the present? What are these Washingtons doing in England? Is there life in the old stock yet? Have they achieved ought?

Let us hope they are not quite idle in their generation. Five out of the seven male cousins, children of John and Adam Washington of the last generation, are in holy orders in the Church of England. Four are beneficed in England. One, the writer of these lines, the eldest son of the elder brother—is chaplain to one of the Anglican churches in Paris with many American friends and sympathizers among his flock. Another ... is commander in H. B. M. service ... royal ... third, is major in the corps of ... engineers. WOMEN IN OFFICE.

Some of the English Women Who Are Now Office Holders

Cobden's Daughter the First Lady Councillor in England.

The Prominent Place Taken by Mrs. Besant the Democrat.

(Copyrighted, 1889, by Theodore Stanton.)

LONDON, May 11, 1889.

The new county councils for which women may not only vote, but ... which they may be elected, mark a new step in the progress of woman's ... in England. The county councils ... establish in the counties and in London the same form of municipal government which exists already in every English town. For municipal councils women may vote, but they have never yet been elected as members. The wording of the new act left the question of "lady councillors" an open one and it was at once felt that advantage must be taken of the doubt and lady councillors returned at the first election last January. A ladies committee was formed for the re-election of candidates, subscriptions were collected, and, after much deliberation, the Dowager Lady Sandhurst and Miss Jane Cobden consented to bring the question to an issue. Two of the London Liberal Associations immediately volunteered to adopt such excellent candidates, many well known political women took part in the elections, and it was regarded as a great triumph for the cause of women when both ladies were returned at the poll by large majorities.

To Miss Cobden belongs the honor of being the first duly-elected lady county councillor in England as the representative of the Bow and Bromley division of London, and it is appropriate that the daughter of such a thorough-going radical as Richard Cobden should be a leader in the new popular departure. Jane Cobden is one of the elder of the economist's five clever daughters. In appearance she is remarkable owing to the ... of prematurely white hair which crown her still white face for she is barely thirty-five. Her expression is refined and gentle and she wears picturesque and becoming costumes, which complete a very attractive personality. And yet, with all her gentle womanliness no one has done peripatetic agitation more persistently than Jane Cobden. She has lectured and spoken all over the country on all manner of topics. Her name is, of course, a very valuable piece of political stock in trade. It cannot be said that she really speaks well, and she dislikes it above all things; and yet her name, her pleasant voice, and obvious sincerity and goodliness, never fail to make an impression. She is certain to carry her audience with her.

Miss Cobden lives alone in a cosy little house out at Hampstead. Two of her married sisters are well known in the artistic world, one as the wife of Mr Sanderson, barrister and artistic book binder, the other as the wife of Mr. Sickert, one of the cleverest members of the "Impressionist" school. The farm house at Midhurst, Sussex, where Cobden spent his declining years still remains in the family, and his political daughter has always made use of the connection to keep alive a little spark of local liberalism in the heart of one of England's most tory counties. Miss Cobden is by nature most conscientious and painstaking, and there is no doubt that she will fill her important duties as lady councillor in a manner worthy of the name she bears. It need hardly be added that she has already taken her place among the "Progressives" on the council.

The second female county councillor is Lady Sandhurst now quite advanced in age, who has led an active, busy life in all directions. Her late husband Sir William Mansfield, received his peerage for brilliant services rendered during the Indian mutiny and afterwards he became commander in chief of the army in Bombay. Since his death some twelve years ago, Lady Sandhurst has resided in Portland Place and has given herself to good works of all sorts. Her pet philanthropic enterprise, and one that absorbs every spare penny in her possession, is a Children's Cripple home where she herself practices magnetic treatment on the patients, and, it is said with marvellous success.

Lady Sandhurst is deeply religious and a thoroughly kind, good natured woman with a pleasant, motherly face and dignified manner. Latterly she has done much political work, has founded a Marylebone Women's Liberal association, of which she is the president and is very much to the fore side by side with Mrs Gladstone, Lady Aberdeen and Countess Tolston at all big functions of the Women's Liberal federation. It may be mentioned that Lady Sandhurst ... related to the liberal leader by the ... of her sister ... elder brother, but political feeling ... high in the families that the two ... very little of one another ... many irons in the fire it is a ...

The board schools of England like the public schools of America have been regarded as a natural field for women's work ever since they were established by Mr. Forster's education act of 1871. There is a school board in every town and every county entrusted with the management of the local board schools. The franchise is the broadest in the kingdom including both lodgers and women. The elections take place every three years, the voting being on the cumulative principle. The London school board, however, by virtue of the immense population it takes charge of, is the most important of these educational bodies, and occupies palatial premises on the Thames embankment.

Mrs Garrett Anderson, M. D., the most distinguished of the English female physicians, had the honour of being the first woman to sit on the school board. This was in 1871, and since then every board has contained several active women. The present board, elected last November, out of a total of 55 members, contains only four ladies: Miss Davenport Hill, Mrs Besant, Mrs Ashton Dilke, and Mrs Maitland. The quartette, however, promises to be a very efficient one, three out of the four ladies being thoroughly well known to the public in different branches of social and political labour. To be an M. L. S. B. (member of the London school board) means serious work. Besides the weekly board meeting every Thursday afternoon, every member belongs to four or five committees for the supervision of different branches of the work, besides having some half dozen schools under his or her personal supervision.

Miss Davenport Hill deserves to be regarded as the doyenne of the school board ladies. Whereas her three female colleagues were all elected for the first time at the last election, Miss Hill has sat on at least three previous boards as one of the members for the city. She is quite an elderly lady now of about 60 years of age, short and stout in appearance with a kindly plain face and dressed with the unobtrusive shabbiness which busy Englishwomen are apt to affect. In her educational views Miss Hill is strictly moderate. None of the socialist ideas, such as free dinners provided by the board, find favor in her sight, but her great practical knowledge and experience make her thoroughly reliable in detail work. Her pet hobby is the teaching of cooking to the school girls, and she takes every opportunity of pushing her views. The training at the industrial schools is another subject on which she gives much attention, and she is also an active member of the needle work committee, a department Miss Florence Davenport-Hill, who served for some time as poor law guardian on the St. Pancras board of this city, and has now just been invited to fill a vacancy at Hampstead, another London district in which feminine knowledge is specially required.

Miss Davenport Hill has an unmarried sister and these two energetic old ladies live together in the pleasant regions of South Hampstead.

Mrs. Besant is undoubtedly the ablest, as she is the most "advanced," of the women who undertook for the first time this winter the responsibilities of official life on the school board. As a secularist, a socialist, an indefatigable lecturer and a true hearted friend of the working classes, Mrs. Besant has been before the public for the last 12 years, and the splendid total of 15,000 votes by which she was elected by the Tower Hamlets division of London last November was a well earned tribute of admiration from the working men of the district.

Mrs. Besant's popularity and influence with the London democracy are undoubted. There is a wonderful magnetic attraction about her. Her face in repose can hardly be called handsome, but when animated her dark Irish eyes flash fire and, as one of her lady friends once said to me, "she has one of the sweetest smiles I have ever seen." Her short curling hair, and the somewhat peculiar attire which she affects add to the individuality of her appearance. But her eloquence is after all her greatest attraction. I have heard her speak time after time and always with a re... deep earnestness. At the debates of the Fabian society the socialist body of which she is a member she is the only speaker whom you feel to possess a ... ... [illegible] ... Mrs. Besant ... position, is the extreme probability that she will split in two the progressive party now in a minority, and will thus play into the hands of Mr. Diggle the chairman and his clerical supporters. It is to be hoped that she will learn to practice patience, to have more ... too belligerent an attitude.

As regards courage and downright hard work very few women can approach Annie Besant. She lives alone in a pleasant house in St. John's Wood, but she is usually to be found immersed in business in a little office room up two flights of narrow stairs above the Free Thought publishing office in Fleet street. There it was that I saw her for the first time six or seven years ago. She writes largely, she lectures all over the country, she edits the National Reformer for Mr Bradlaugh, she founds working girl unions, and takes up every forlorn political cause in the metropolis. And yet Mrs. Besant is the best abused and most misrepresented woman in London, and the bugbear of polite society. Her advocacy of Neo-Malthusian theories, and still more her almost bitter antagonism to the Christianity of the present day, fully account for this. It was entirely on religious grounds that she left her husband, a clergyman, and, by the way, brother to Mr. Walter Besant, the novelist, and the separation from her only daughter has been the deepest sorrow of her life. No woman has had to suffer more for her opinions than Mrs Besant, and perhaps the hardness of the world may have embittered her a little but she has at least the consolation of knowing that she has fought a brave fight for the freedom of women, and that she has earned the affectionate gratitude of thousands of working men and women throughout England.

Second—Comrades will assemble at the G. A. R. hall in this city at the hour of 8:15 o'clock and will form under the direction of the marshal, escorted by Company A, accompanied by other societies. The procession will move at 9 o'clock sharp and take the train for the cemetery.

Third—Upon the arrival at that place will march to the flag staff, where the services will be held and the graves of all soldiers, strewn with flowers by the pupils of the public schools.

Fourth—The memorial address will be delivered by Gen. B. M. Prentiss and the ritual of the G. A. R. in that behalf recited together with vocal and instrumental music.

Fifth—The first train will leave the Denver, Texas and Fort Worth depot at 8 o'clock. The fare to and from the city will be fifteen cents for all wishing to attend. All are cordially invited.

L. E. DWINELL, Adjutant. OTIS RUNNING, Post Commander.

Strikers Resorting To ...

CHICAGO, May 27.—A dispatch from Braidwood, Ills. the scene of the trouble with the striking coal miners says:

In response to an appeal by the sheriff of Will county for armed reinforcements, Governor Fifer has authorized the Illinois National guard to protect the property and persons endangered by the riot at Braidwood. Adjutant General Vance has ordered a regiment of men to aid the sheriff. About 300 strikers from the adjoining mining villages armed with guns and revolvers, marched in a body on the J shaft in this city at 3 o'clock this afternoon. About fifteen employes who were present were marched at the end of the strikers' guns to a safe distance north of the shaft and then the turbulent mob proceeded to fill the shaft up with earth and debris and to wreck things generally. After a half hour of this work they left, saying they would be back shortly and burn the shaft. Serious times are expected.

So I went to Connecticut and got a man I had known from boyhood."

"Is the arrangement of the work such that an employe could, if he wished, get away with a large sum of money?"

"Yes. I am entirely dependent upon the honesty of the men. As will be seen in another column Prof. A. Charlot advertises that he will give lessons in French in this city on Mondays. He has been teaching for some time in Denver and stands at the head of his profession. He is highly recommended by his scholars for the intelligent and satisfactory way he teaches. Those who wish to study French will do well to improve this opportunity.

BASE BALL.

The Denver Boys Again Wins from the Springs.

The [illegible] yesterday was called at 3:30 instead of 3 o'clock as heretofore. The weather for some time before had been threatening and this no doubt was the cause of the small attendance. Judging from the treatment the home team received from the audience everybody had money or wind bet on the Denver club. F. E. Johnson umpired the game. In the beginning he made a decision at first base that seriously affected the Denver club, and during the rest of the game his decisions were exactly the opposite. Whenever a close decision was made to the disadvantage of the home team certain portions of the audience would go wild with delight.

The Denver boys knocked the ball very hard but the fine fielding of the Springs club prevented their scoring many base hits. McMahon, on left, made some beautiful stops as did also J. A. Lynch and P. Lynch. Glenalvin made a couple of errors which allowed two men to reach first base. The Denver boys repeated their usual trick of allowing men to steal bases while their players stood around and talked. They are very careless at times in this respect.

But the feature of the game was the way the ball was knocked over the fence. In the third inning Garbosky knocked a foul over the left fence and in the last half of the eighth Mackey came to the bat and knocked a ball over the left field fence for a home run. This is the first time a ball has been knocked over the fence without striking the ground. Stevens followed him and drove a ball to center field corner for a home run.

The game ended in a kick by the Springs boys, who claimed that they were entitled to a run after the game was called because the ball was not thrown to the pitcher after the third put out. Examination of the rules proved that they were mistaken. Following is the

Mr. Arthur Perkins returned home from an extended business and pleasure trip in the east yesterday.

There will be an important meeting of the Jackson Hose company this evening. All [illegible] are urged to be present.

Professor Coombs, of Indianapolis closes his work at the Christian church to-night with his lecture on "Strange Things and Funny People."

Those who have flowers to offer to be used in decorating the soldiers' graves on Thursday, are requested to leave them at the G. A. R. headquarters Wednesday morning.

Victoria, the well known cook, has her boarding house at 118 N. Tejon street, in good running order now. Well cooked meals and reasonable rates will be the order.

A number of persons at Woodside h[illegible] and at the Baptist parsonage are said to have been slightly dazed by lightning yesterday afternoon. Nothing of a serious nature however.

Gen. B. M. Prentiss, the hero of Shiloh, will be greeted by an immense audience on Thursday evening, when he delivers his celebrated lecture at the opera house. Tickets are selling rapidly.

On Sunday the Salvation army celebrated the ninth anniversary of the introduction of the movement into America. Adjutant Gifford of Denver and others prominent in the army throughout the state were in attendance.

Chief Ferrin and the foremen of the different companies of the fire department had a meeting last night and decided to accept the invitation of the G. A. R. post to attend the Memorial Day exercises. They will occupy a position in the line of parade on Thursday morning.

Manager A. W. Bailey, of The Mansion, Manitou, formally opened the house on Sunday night by serving a complimentary dinner to a number of the citizens of Manitou. There were also a number of guests present from this city and Denver. An elegant dinner was served.

Mr. Mart Underwood, deputy county clerk of Prowers county, was in the city yesterday, and paid the Gazette office a pleasant call. Mr. Underwood was deputy clerk in Bent county before the division, and Prowers county is fortunate in securing so efficient a deputy.

Charles King, the colored man who was for [illegible] years the porter at the Barker house, Manitou, and very popular with the travelling public, was tried for insanity by Judge S[illegible] and a jury yesterday afternoon. About a year ago King suffered a stroke of paralysis which has finally affected his brain. He was declared insane and will be taken to the Pueblo asylum.

[illegible] 's "Twelve Temptation" company played to the largest audience of the season at the opera house last night. The play is spectacular and perhaps one of the best ever given in this city. It was superbly [illegible] ted in every way, but there is no doubt of the fact that the opera house is too small for the successful production of spectacular plays. The conception of the play is good, although the dialogue is incidental to the scenery. The people in the cast are rather indifferent, as they are apt to be with such large companies. Owing to the absence of Mr. Neil Florence the principal character was assumed by one of the ladies of the company. Three very pretty ballets were danced and were elegantly costumed. On the whole the audience was well pleased with the production.
